

MAYOR SHAKES PRINCE'S HAND

Fushimi Is Late in Calling at City Hall, but the Two Men Do Meet and Each Solemnly Says He Is "Happy" and "Pleased"

CONSUL UCHIDA DOES HONORS AS INTERPRETER.

Prince Muoh Interested in Sand-Blast Cleaning and Mayor Thinking About His Luncheon, so Their Visit Is Brief.

Prince Fushimi and Mayor McClellan have met and talked it over. What they said was through an interpreter and the whole visit of the Japanese Prince was over inside of ten minutes, including some two minutes he waited for the Mayor to come from the inner office and about four more he waited for his carriage to be called.

Consul-General Uchida, M. Watanabe and Major Mihara accompanied the Prince, while a Secret Service man assigned by this Government was their guide.

The hour set for the visit was 11.30, but it was fifteen minutes after when the two carriages drove up to the City Hall. The Prince was deeply interested in the sand blasting of the building and stopped as he reached the door of the hall to see the fine stream of sand being shot at one of the stone pillars.

The meeting between the Mayor and the Prince was in the reception room. Consul Uchida introduced the Prince to the Mayor and the two shook hands, looking each other squarely in the face like a couple of men about to take the referee's word to go to their corners.

SCENES IN THE POLICE PLAY PRESENTED AT THE GRAND CENTRAL PALACE LAST NIGHT.

Both smiled and took seats in a corner of the room.

Through Consul Uchida the Mayor said he was pleased to meet His Highness and to welcome him to the city. He said he had read of the Prince and felt that he already knew him.

The Prince replied that he had been charmed in his visit to the city and was delighted to meet the city's executive, and the visit was over. The Mayor arose, shook hands and for several minutes it was thought he had gone into the private office and would return. The Prince party turned and stood gazing out of the window until their carriages were ready.

By the time the Prince had left the City Hall Mayor McClellan was half-way across City Hall Park on his way to luncheon.

POLICE ACTORS MAKE BIG HITS

"Under the Green Lamps" Presented by Uniformed Men at Grand Central Palace to an Audience of Six Thousand.

Mr. Frohman, if he is wise, will greet the patrolmen he meets on Broadway respectfully hereafter, and Klaw & Erlanger will probably do likewise, for the policeman is a play producer now, and his chest is inflated with success.

"Under the Green Lamps," a play written about the incidents of a police station, was produced at the Grand Central Palace with real policemen in the various roles. An audience of 6,000 witnessed and applauded it to the echo. Commissioner McAdoo and Mrs. McAdoo occupied a box with two ladies, and all four split their gloves in applauding the heroic actions of the hero of the play.

"Under the Green Lamps" was written by Newton Macmillan. The curtain rose on a roll-call in the Tenderloin station at which Capt. Cottrell read a list of impossible instructions to the men about to go on duty. Then the theatre squad sauntered in and sang the songs they had heard on their rounds. Drunks, crooks, sports and rounders were lined up before the desk in quick succession. One "Jag" said he had acquired his joyousness in the Subway Tavern, and whooped it up for "Bliss Potter."

There was something doing all the time in "Under the Green Lamps," the efforts of the big "coppers" to win historic glory before their companions being particularly strenuous. Twelve thousand hands clapped with a noise like thunder at every telling point. The applause was particularly generous.

Before the play Ajax, the "strong man" of the force, did a few stunts in lifting weights, with his teeth, and Doorman George Gilbert sang a couple of popular songs.

Nearly 14,000 was realized for the benefit of the police band.
